Midget Hockey

The Arrowwood Midgets were on the short end of the score with the Vulcan Midgets when they played last Saturday evening in Mossleigh. The game was one that was full of excitement from start to finish. The Vulcan team were much the larger but they received a surprise by the teamwork of the locals. The final score was 2-1.

The Midgets play the Strathmore Midgets in Arrowwood on Friday, Dec. 27th, at 3 o'clock. Due to the thaw last week the Midget draw was postponed and will take place Friday at your ticket and come and see the game.

School Concert

Well Attended

Seating capacity was at a premium Friday night last when the pupils of the Arrowwood Public School presented their annual Christmas Revue, in the school auditorium.

Shortly after 7:00 in the evening the chairman, Mr. L. H. Irwin, in a short introduction, thanked the teachers and pupils for the time and effort which they had spent to make the Revue a successful event.

Members of the primary room were first to take the stage and the other rooms followed in their respective order. The program consisting of musical numbers, drills, etc., was well received by the large crowd on hand.

Upon the conclusion of the program, Santa Claus made his debut whereupon the gifts from the Xmas tree were distributed; sacks of candies also being distributed among the children.

THE EVER-WIDENING WAVE CIRCLES, OR THE JUBILEE OF THE "LAST SPIKE"

The reverberation of the driving of the last spike of the world's greatest transportation enterprise has not yet ceased electrifying the world in the interest of Canada and humanity in general.

BUFFALO HILL NOTES

The concert and dance at the Buffalo School last Friday was a success. There was a good attendance and the concert was much appreciated, which, after all, is the measure of how well the program was carried out. The dance, judging by the number on the floor, appeared to be highly favored and came up to the expectation of all. Contributing to the pleasant time was the splendid music, fine weather and good food, which seemed highly appreciated, judging by the reluctance with which the dancers greeted the announcement of the Home Sweet Home Waltz. This waltz had to be deferred more than once and finally ended about 8:30 a.m.

Mr. Geo. Remple, who has been working near Banff, is spending a few days during the Xmas at the home of Mr. J. H. Wyatt and renewing acquaintances.

Miss Shirley McInnes, who has been staying at Brooks, is home for the Christmas season.

The next dance at the Buffalo School will be held Friday, Jan. 17th. Good food and good music.

Brethren Church Notes

Rev. J. S. Culp will be in charge of the services on next Sunday morning.

The Norton family will be in charge of the evening service. They will furnish numbers of special music and other special features. Russell Burries will be the Sunday evening speaker.

The Pastor accompanied by about a dozen of the local group have gone to Irricana to conduct a ten day Bible School.

United Church Notes

Regular service at 11:45 a.m. Subject: "A Happy New Year! How to Begin." In the treatment of this topic such questions as the following will be made to give an intelligent answer: Can we be happy if we don't know where the next meal is coming from for our families or ourselves? Can a man in the death areas be happy when his crop is all dried up? Is it possible for reasonable to have such confidence in the Heavenly Father that you are willing to trust yourself to Him in the conditions of life as we know them.

There will be special music.

HOCKEY NOTES

Arr'd 1-Mossleigh 2
For the second time in as many weeks the Mossleigh club have emerged victorious over the Arrowwood Cardinals by a one goal margin. Taking advantage of the breaks, and playing more systematic hockey the Mossleigh club chalked up an early two goal lead which proved sufficient to carry them to the victory. Lionel Hansen in the Mossleigh fort was doing overtime duty for his club, but his skilful manipulation enabled him to stop pucks which seemed headed for the corner. This stellar goal tending and the stone-wall defence thrown up by the winners proved very effective. The play was decidedly in favor of the Cardinals for the full 20 minutes of the third period, but goalie Hansen pulled the spectacular and proved invincible on every shot except a close-in one by Ernie Norton, who collected the locals lone tally.

Excitement ran high for a few minutes in the third period when Floyd Elkins and Frita Mason started an argument which ended in a fist encounter. A large crowd of fans from both towns were present to cheer their respective teams.

Miners 2-Arrowwood 3

A large crowd of hockey fans assembled at the Cluny rink Tuesday of last week to witness the first home game of the Blackfoot Miners, who came out on the short end of a 2-2 score with the Arrowwood Cardinals. The game was highly exciting from the first face-off with end-to-end rushes, making the play lively. The defence of both clubs was turning in a great game so that the forwards found the goals plenty difficult to get. The Cardinals took an early lead when that fast skating centre ice man, Ernie Norton, engineered plays which clicked for three goals. With grim determination to overcome the lead the redskins pressed hard, but were only successful in tallying twice.

The game was a somewhat rough affair with Neil Dumka of the locals being being the centre of interest in a third period Indian raid.

Annual Meeting, Little Bow Constituency S. C. Association

The annual meeting of the Little Bow Constituency Social Credit Association will be held at Queenstown on Wednesday, Jan. 8th, at 8 p.m.—weather permitting.

There will be a business session, election of officers, etc., in the morning, followed by a lunch. In the afternoon following the installation of officers there will be speeches by the Rev. Peter Dawson, M.L.A., Rev. E. G. Hansell, M.P., after which there will be a period for resolutions and general discussion of policies.

At 6 p.m. a banquet, prepared by the Queenstown Ladies' Group, will be given. The evening open session will then be addressed by Mrs. W. W. Rogers, M.L.A.

MOSSLEIGH NOTES

Mrs. Pinkerton and daughter Mildred of Calgary are spending the holiday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Pinkerton of Mossleigh.

Mr. Frank Moon left last Friday for Lomond where he will spend the Xmas holidays.

A large crowd attended the Christmas Concert put on by the pupils of Trege School Wednesday night, Dec. 18 in Mossleigh Hall. The program consisted of various numbers including skits, drills, monologues and songs. At the close of the program Santa Claus made his appearance much to the enjoyment of the little folks.

The Mossleigh Dramatic Society held their regular meeting and party Monday evening December 16. Skating was enjoyed at the rink until 10 o'clock when lunch was served. A short business meeting was held at the school and dancing followed. A short pantomime provided excellent entertainment. The Society now boasts a membership of forty with a number of added members at each meeting.

Italy's Wheat Imports

A few years ago Italy was a very large importer of wheat. In 1928, for instance, Canada alone exported to her 16 million bushels.

During the past few years Italy has imported but little wheat. Italy's officials tell us this is because other countries are no longer willing to purchase Italian goods and products—therefore Italy cannot secure funds with which to purchase Canadian and other grains.

It is hoped that economic sanity will soon return to the world and that goods, commodities and wheat will be exchanged once more between the nations in generous volume.

FLEMING'S
FOLLY
—BY—
LAWRENCE A. KEATING

SYNOPSIS

Here is an absorbing and exciting story of a fight against stern prejudice and a bitter personal malignancy of a girl and a man battling rascals, saboteurs, bullies, and the machinery that would turn them against each other.

The story opens with Link Fleming addressing a meeting of Boon County cattlemen, called together with the object of forming an irrigation company.

Roger Kilgo, the boss of the Hawke and nearby ranges, who seemed to approve the plan, was really opposed to it. He had heard Link Fleming, a derelict mining engineer, whom Kilgo knew would be called upon to give his expert opinion in favor of the scheme, reverse his earlier endorsement, and declare that irrigation in Boon County so far as Hamilton's plan was concerned, was only a new-fangled way to waste money.

(Now Go On With The Story)

As she did not answer at once Roper followed her eyes, "Fleming's been tryin' to hogtie the boys on a scheme to water the whole county. Can yuh beat that? Crazy, I call it. But he's bullheaded, ain't yuh, Link? Might have put it over, too," he chuckled derisively, "but look! Those boys picked his balloon, and saved the boys about sixty thousand bucks, I reckon!"

There was a brief silence. "I know about it, Roper," Helen returned quietly. "I'm in favor of irrigation, too. It's the only way to improve our range."

"In favor of it? A loco stunt like that? But how—I mean, goah, where'd yuh hear about it?"

"Link talked irrigation to me a long time ago and I told him nothing doing. Then, Buzz rasped accusingly, "he figured he could work on my sister just 'cause she's a sucker. Prob'ly thought if he got her talked into it, she'd swing me. But by gosh I won't."

"Ah, Buzz, please don't make a scene!"

Kilgo rubbed his chin. "So Link went over her, eh? That's the plenty o' crust, correspondin' with yuh sister and hidin' it from yuh! He jerked his ear as if reflecting scorn. "Darned if I'd stand for that. Buz, I'm durned if I would!"

"Hold on. There wasn't anything underhand about it at all," the Star Leap owner declared coolly.

Helen hung back as Kilgo reached out to take her arm. "I want to talk this over with Mr. Fleming. Yuh see, I'm really serious about it. Why, it will be wonderful—it will make our spread twice as valuable."

"Yuh got no call to write my sister!" This fact seemed to stick in the man's mind, spurring him to deeper wrath as he continued away. Buzz's face was dark, and the twitching of a cheek muscle showed him scarcely able to keep his chin. He turned on Roper. "Has he?"

"Nerviest thing I ever heard! Don't know's I like it myself," he growled. "Everybody knows Helen and I practically had things settled before she went away with yore dad. I been 'round two years and getting sassy. 'Course, I ain't her brother like yuh are. It's up to yuh how yuh aim to take this here interference."

"None!" Embarrassment sent waves of crimson stealing over her smooth cheeks. "Link, if yuh are starting to yuh spread she said hesitantly, "I'm going that way too. Perhaps we could talk about it and..."

"Yuh're not ridin' out with him; I ain't goin' to have it! He swung on Fleming. "Just about yore size—this sneaky little shaver!"

Link had almost reached the limit of his patience. It was only by exerting every ounce of control that he restrained himself from leaping out with a hard fist at the man's chin. His gaze riveted on the glittering blue-grey eyes as with set jaw he answered in a cold, level tone.

"You've got this all wrong. Our correspondence started by accident, and I don't like 'maul's. Is that plain?"

Buzz stepped back. Malevolence glittered in his frosty warning as swiftly he noted the position of Buster Townsend, who stood waiting for his employer, then of Helen, Kilgo, and Link. A transformation seemed to take place inside the man. His hot cheeks drained of blood and his lower lip quivered with unpeakable fury.

"Damn yuh!" he screamed. "I'll teach yuh to monkey with my sister and plot to grab yuh spread!"

Suddenly, looting a wolfish snarl, he plunged for his Colt.

"Buzz!" Helen flung out both hands to stop his draw.

Fearful lest she be shot, and wholly ignoring his own imminent danger, Link also plunged forward to grasp her shoulder and jerk her out of harm's way.

Wham! The room reeled with the force of a pounding explosion. A third cloud of acrid powder smoke waited for their nostrils, blurred vision. Fleming, unharmed, probed puzzledly from one taut countenance to the next. He staggered and all but lost his balance as Buster struck him with blunt force, both hands clutched to his middle.

"No!" he gasped. Twisting and writhing in agony, the Star Leap foreman lurched two steps, then sprawled on his side at their feet.

CHAPTER III.

Helen Hamilton uttered a horrified gasp. Kilgo's expression of satisfaction changed swiftly to dismay as he felt back, startled. Two men on the veranda outside halted to peer through the heavy window. Spying Buster on the floor, they came on the run through the front door of the house.

For Buzz, the report of his own weapon had the effect of a severe shock. With heavy heart, he stepped from it, a wisp of smoke curling from its muzzle, to Townsend. His rammed face swept grey. He hung a quick look around, shrined, and started out of the place.

Link would have made after him just then the newcomers seized Hamilton. With a hard jerk thrust Fleming wrestled the Colt away and jammed it inside his own belt. The next moment Anne had his man prisoner with manacles locked over both wrists.

"Dead, Link?"

"No. But he's hurt bad. Seem to have got it in the stomach. He's headed to Gaius, the hotel, clerk."

"Ah, run for Doc Slater, quick!"

Townsend's chubby face was pale under its coat of range tan, and his eyes were closed. He had ceased to breathe. Link, in a moment, Link stooped, picked up the man as if he weighed half his hundred and seventy pounds, and strode with him to the back door, where he found a nurse, as tenderly as possible, he laid him down.

"Give him a shot of 'ol, Link."

With shaking hand Roper offered a half-filled bottle he had taken from his pocket. Fleming accepted it, and then extracted the cork, pressing the bottle opening to Buster's lips. The brown whisky trickled down his cheeks but some, Link thought, penetrated the tightly-set lips.

There was a bustle behind as roly-poly Doc Slater puffed in. "Get back, folks! Sheriff, better call the lobby. One thing the human animal sure needs to live—air. Now then!"

The practitioner dropped his bag and frowning, got on his knees. He glanced over his shoulder. "Bring that girl here. Women are handy at this kind of thing. Need a man too, here, Kilgo yuh can hand me the instrument."

"Wh-what good 'ol, to Doc?"

"Operate, yuh course! But Link, what the gineast lead to," he muttered, shaking his head doubtfully. "Don't know. 'Bledin' pretty hard."

Helen Hamilton was at Slater's side, her lips pressed firmly together, trying to force herself not to shudder at the death-like pallor of the man her brother had shot. Doc looked at her and grunted.

"Yuh got grit enough, I reckon. Don't be scared lots of blood."

"Doc, I—" Roper gulped while he kept his eyes averted from the wounded man. "I don't know if I can hold this, I'm liable to keel over!" he exclaimed in panic.

The physician gave a disgusted look. "Here, somebody else—Link! Hold this gun. Thanks, Gaius: that's using yuh head for somethin' useful. Only man that thought of hot water in the whole crowd! Now then. Easy, Buster. 't Won't hurt much. Ah, it's there, eh? Wonder if it went clear into it..."

There was a moment of taut silence. Fleming's eyes met those of his the girl over Dr. Slater's shiny bald pate. Her face was white as the sheet of paper, but when he dodged questioningly toward the door she shook her head.

Link himself by no means relished this sort of thing. Buster was growling and gasping in pain, fearful of the doctor's very touch. Suddenly Slater turned around.

"Ain't got 'weak like Kilgo, are yuh?"

"No," he whispered. "I got to try a damned delicate operation to save that boy's life. Need two of yuh. Think the girl can stand it?"

"It was her brother shot Townsend. Doc. But I reckon she's the game kind."

He whistled. "Her brother? That scamp Buster grabbed? Ought to make him watch it, that's what Anne oughta do. While he spoke he watched Buster carefully. "I ain't got a drop o' ether or chloroform. Give me that gun of yuh, Link."

"Here, blow down the trigger and handed it over, but first. Puzzled at Doc's intent, he watched him twirl the Colt until he grasped its cold barrel.

With a gasp that wavered and died Helen stepped back, her eyes closed. But for Fleming's watchfulness she would have fallen. He gathered her slight body in his arms, hurried to another lounge, and laid her gently upon it.

Tricks In All Trades

Clipping Sheep For Show Purposes Is Quite An Art

There are tricks in all trades, and the showing trick in such events as the Royal Winter Fair in Toronto is no exception. Officials of the Canadian Association of Exhibitors decide it is all right to fix any animal for show purposes in a legitimate way, but they want to draw the line at injecting wax under the skin to fill up certain hollows, or stitching the skin in such a way as to remove some fault in conformation.

With may be the average individual when attending a fall or winter fair never pays much attention to sheep for instance. The spectator may notice that they are carefully trimmed, and if he is observant it may occur to him that sheep in the field do not look as well cropped as those on exhibition.

Not long ago one farmer said he never had been able to get his sheep properly clipped for show purposes. He explained that when the animal was marked for showing the clipping was done earlier than with the rest of the flock, the idea being to allow the wool an opportunity to get a good growth before being trimmed for show purposes. Our farmer insisted he could clip and wash sheep and then clip them right enough, but it was this business of giving the animals a hair cut for show purposes that he had never been able to master. He admitted having tried it several times, but said the results were never right. It may be some time before readers have opportunity again to look at a sheep in a show pen, but it may be well to bear in mind that clipping the wool for show purposes is quite an art. Most of the exhibitors make a fine job of it.—Peterborough Examiner.

Dust Explosions

Research Work Has Resulted In Reduction Of Losses

"Research work has resulted in a marked reduction in losses from dust explosion and resulting fire in the principal grain and milling industries in both Canada and the United States," David J. Price, chemical engineer of the United States department of agriculture at Washington, told the Royal Canadian Institute at Toronto.

Although considerable progress has been made, all causes of dust explosions are not known, Mr. Price said. In general the ignition of an explosive mixture of dust and air results in a primary explosion which jars other dust loose from ledges and beams, machinery parts and walls. This dust suspended in air feeds the flames and brings about a secondary explosion of larger proportions.

The importance of removing settled dust or "static" dust in an industrial plant is therefore a vital factor in dust explosion prevention and control, he said. If there is no accumulated dust to feed the flame of the preliminary flash or fire, the secondary and more serious explosion does not follow.

Dust explosions are not confined to grain handling or milling plants, but are possible in most industrial plants and should be guarded against, the visiting chemist declared.

France Has New Sport

Shooting Fish On Ocean Bed Has Become Craze

Saint Raphael, France, reports that a fish-shooting season has opened on the bed of the ocean for the first time, and the sport is becoming a craze. It is due to the invention of an underwater hunting outfit by Colonel Le Prieur. Each hunter wears a rubber mask containing a glass porthole. This is connected with a bottle of compressed air, strapped to the shoulders, which makes breathing under water normal. A pneumatic gun completes the equipment. "Bags" of edible and interesting specimens have been reported by hunters.
